JUST RIGHT FOR LONDON'S SNARK

Captain Warren Was Member of Famous Ransome Expedition.

Jack London has secured just the man that he wants for the navigator and commander of the Snark, in the person of Captain J. L. Warren. London is naturally of a rather adventurous spirit and wants the same kind of men on his vessel. In Warren he should surely be satisfied. Warren has followed the sea ever since youth, and his large experience as officer and commander on various vessels, both sailing and steam, fits him in every way for the position, while, when it comes to adventures, Warren has also had his share.

He was one of the members of the famous party which went to Terra del Fuego in 1897 in search of gold. This party, which was called the Ransome party, after its leader, a prominent business man of Cleveland, Ohio, sailed from New York in a schooner which had been in use in that port as a pilot boat. There were nine members all told and they were prepared to scoop gold from the sand on Terra del Fuego by the bucketful.

Captain Warren was at that time the first officer of the steamer Julie Park, which was lying in Buenos Ayres. When the little party reached that port they made quite a stay, taking on supplies to last them for nearly a year. Warren heard of their adventure, and, since he had a little money saved up and they needed a navigator, he asked for the job, specifying, however, that he should come into the scheme on the same share that all the others were taking. This was agreeable to the rest and he joined the expedition.

The schooner was loaded down with a dredge, heavy cables with which it could be anchored out from shore, rifles, in case the natives should be hostile, and everything that could be thought of, that might be needed in the long stay.

For six long months the members of the party worked on their mines, finding the color of gold everywhere, but never finding it in sufficient quantities to pay. The chief thing which caused the expedition to fail was the fact that not one of the party knew anything about the work which they were attempting.

After six months of hard work the Ransome party returned to civilization, taking $18 worth of gold dust as the result of their labor. They sailed up to Point Arenas, the wool port of Chile, where the schooner was sold for $2000, which was evenly divided among the members of the party that all might get home. All their money had been spent and the only souvenir of the trip was the $18 worth of gold dust.

Colonel George W. Macfarlane and E. D. Tenney are returning passengers on the Manchuria.
